SUPERVISOR LONG BUILDS ROADS HERE

During the first of this week crews under the personal supervision of Supervisor Jas. N. Long of Richmond have completed the improvement of Rodeo avenue from Pacific to Third street and of Pacific avenue from Rodeo avenue intersection to Parker avenue.

These two blocks have been surfaced and the top coating spread and will probably be thrown open for traffic during next week or the week following, subject to the conditions of the weather in the meantime.

These are two of the important thoroughfares in Rodeo and the completion of the improvement will be a great help to Rodeo people. Both these streets were in the program of improvements started by Supervisor Long in Rodeo earlier in the year but were delayed while grade was allowed to solidify.

In addition to this work crews have been busy through the past two weeks cleaning the grass off the streets. This adds to the appearance of the community and has provided considerable employment for local men.

Arvid Pauly is sponsoring a whist party here dated for August 16, as a benefit for the junior baseball team of which he is manager. Mr. Pauly is giving considerable time to the youngsters of Rodeo to help them have directed recreation during the summer as well as during the school months.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Reed and children have been at California Redwood park in San Mateo county.

Mrs. Lila Gomez, and children visited at Neptune Beach in Oakland on Thursday.

Rodeo Boys Are Found Opening Boxes At P. O.

A great deal of complaint has been made recently to Mrs. Ella Ackerman, postmaster, that mail in boxes in the Rodeo postoffice was being tampered with.

On Tuesday evening Sharkey Del Monte went to the post office to get his mail and he found two small boys with his post office box open running over his mail. He took the boys to Mrs. Ackerman, who took their names and will probably turn them over to the post office department for investigation by the inspectors.

Parents of Rodeo are advised that they are responsible for post-office violations by their children. It is the policy of the postoffice department to assess against parents the losses and fines for violation of regulations of children.

Mrs. Ackerman has announced that, unless the parents of the children cooperate to prevent violations of postal regulations she will close the Rodeo postoffice at 6 o'clock each evening.

JUNIOR TEAM WHIST IS SET FOR AUGUST 16

A whist party that will capture the interest of local folks is the one which will be held on Wednesday evening, Aug. 16, by the Rodeo Junior Costa Junior baseball team. The party will be held in Rodeo Fire Hall and will be under the supervision of Arvid Pauly and the boys on his baseball team.

The members of the Rodeo junior team, sons of local people, are on a drive in the junior league at this time which opens before them the opportunity to win the championship. After a slow start they have hit their stride, apparently, under the tutelage of Pauly, Rodeo's greatest baseball fan, and are now recognized as the threat of the league.

These young fellows are playing a regular schedule, just like the Pacific coast league, meeting the opposing teams throughout the county every so often. So far they have been able to do this through the assistance of their parents and other rabid fans of the community.

But they have their expenses, baseballs, catcher's masks, etc. to buy. In order to properly outfit the team this whist is being given. The boys hope that the townspeople will give them a big turnout, so they can purchase these necessities and go on thru their season on a cash basis.

It is announced that extraordinary prizes of special attractiveness will be provided, as well as some unusual entertainment and the boys and Pauly are guaranteeing that those who purchase admission tickets, which are selling at 35 cents each, will have no regrets, unless they specialize in dances and three spots.

NORTH SUTTON, N. H., Aug. 7— A line of National Guardsmen hemmed a girl's camp at Lake Kezar today to prevent kidnappers from carrying out a threat to abduct Betty Downes, 15-year old daughter of a Pennsylvania railroad executive.

Sheriff's deputies, highway police and motor vehicle inspectors helped the 25 guardsmen guard the camp. All automobiles on adjacent roads were searched yesterday. Federal authorities sought authors of the threat.

James Downes, father of the girl said at his Philadelphia home that he received a letter Saturday threatening the kidnapping and that at about the same time a voice on the telephone told his wife to warn her husband to "go ahead with what we told him—the plans about your daughter."

Your Good HEALTH

Knowledge of Intricate Digestive Processes Is Most Important

INDIGESTION, oh, what countless pains are suffered in thy name! The great majority of the patients a doctor sees in his office and their homes complain of some kind of indigestion. Most of it is not indigestion, but some other trouble, yet the patient feels the distress in the abdomen and it is to them indigestion. True, food is taken into the mouth in all kinds of mixtures and quantities regardless of the ability of the stomach and intestines to take care of it. This food is more or less imperfectly chewed and mixed with saliva, which starts digestion. This whole mass is poured into the stomach where it is churned around for awhile and mixed with acid and the other constituents of the gastric juice.

It then is poured out into the intestine and mixed with the fluids from the liver and pancreas. It goes on through the different portions of the intestine, until digestion is completed. The digested fluids are taken up by the blood stream and carried to the various parts of the body to nourish them. This is a very perfect and apparently simple process and nature does very perfect work so long as nothing else or no outside influence interferes with the process. But many things can interfere.

WE EAT our food and digestion starts at once. It proceeds to go on in a very orderly manner, but we become alarmed or worried about something, we get mad and start a discussion or get in a great hurry to do something. Any violent emotion will stop the whole process of digestion at once and it will not start again till our nervous system has passed. In the meantime, food may commence to ferment and we have gas pains and various other forms of distress. This is true indigestion.

OUR mental poise has a great deal to do with the orderly digestion of our food. The time we take to masticate our food controls to a great extent its digestion. Haste here makes waste and pain further along. Because, unless the food is broken up and put in condition, so that the gastric juices can mix with it we have indigestion. Many other conditions occur in the stomach and bowels that cause distress and they too get the name of indigestion though they are not really that.

IF WE have diseased gums or tonsils or pus in the nose, this can drain into the stomach and cause ulcer or at least an ulcerated condition. Then when the stomach is empty or partly so, the excess acid will attack these uncovered areas and cause acute pain. These are the cases that complain of acute pain in the stomach half an hour after eating. They are relieved by eating again because the food takes up the excess of acid. Undissolved these stomachs are carefully dieted and extra acid overcome, they may go on to deep ulcer, which may rupture through the stomach wall and cause the deaths that are said to be caused by acute indigestion. They are not a true indigestion but an ulcer.

ANOTHER cause of acute pain and distress in the upper abdomen and often called dyspepsia is gall stones. This pain is excruciating with a feeling of fullness and distention. It may come on after meals or any time and as the patient has a sick stomach and is often relieved by vomiting, it also is confused with dyspepsia. Then any disease of the pancreas, which lies directly behind the stomach is often confused with indigestion. A chronic appendicitis is made worse by eating because eating sets up a peristalsis or contraction and expansion of the whole abdominal contents and causes pain by pulling on the tender appendix.

SO MANY abdominal conditions are called indigestion when they are not. They resemble it so closely that no one except a trained physician can make a differential diagnosis. Hence self diagnosis with self-medication is a dangerous thing.

ODD FEATURES OFFER UNUSUAL BEAUTY ASSETS

By JACQUELINE HUNT

DO NOT worry if you have irregular or just "plain" features. Think of them as a challenge instead and try to discover the hidden possibilities about yourself. Often by studying yourself and exerting a little intelligent effort you can achieve more striking effects than can be achieved by the woman with average good looks and really asymmetrical features.

Study your facial contours carefully—but remember that they alone do not determine your beauty. Your personal pride, your care in dressing, the qualities of personality that are revealed in your face give you your real beauty. But one thing at a time! Let's see first how we can convert your unusual features into real beauty assets. Take a sheet of paper and a pencil and jot down all of your good points and all of your bad ones. You can afford to be honest, since you will be the one to profit by it.

To really study your features and your facial contours, bind your hair back from your face. Remove all of your make-up and then spread a generous film of cold cream on the face to bring out all of its highlights and shadows. This is most important for achieving the best results with make-up.

Remember that you can change the appearance of your features by other means, too. By changing the way in which your hair frames your face, by changing the types of hats and necklines of your costumes, and by the correct application of rouge and eye shadow.

A thin face can be made to appear fuller by wearing hats with rakish little brims, soft ruffled collars and round or square necklines that are not too low. A round face is made to appear thinner by wearing flat collars, V-shaped or diagonal necklines, and close fitting little hats.

Is your forehead high and wide? That is a beauty asset just now. It gives you a wide-awake, interesting appearance. Unless it is really too high, plan to wear your hair well off your forehead and your eyebrows to give a clean-swept appearance to your forehead. If they grow too close together over your nose, pluck away the offending hairs and lengthen the eyebrows at their outer ends with a hard, sharp-pointed pencil. When you use eye shadow apply it on the outer half of each eyelid, blending it a little heavier near your lashes and carrying it well up toward your eyebrow. You need nicely darkened lashes, too.

If you have dainty ears, show them at every opportunity and wear earrings if you like them and if they are harmonious with your hats and other costume jewelry. If your face is inclined to be plump, wear slender ear-rings; heavier ones or round ones if your face is slender.

What about your nose? Noses made more women unhappy than anything else. If your nose is heavy or large or too long, do not try to make the rest of your face daintier and fragile in appearance. Be daring in your use of rouge and lipstick, darken your eyelashes wickedly and use eye shadow. Have an unusual haircut and wave it and wear clothes with a tailored aspect. If you cannot possibly subordinate any unusual feature, then play up to it! Pretend you are proud of it, and maybe you will be. Cultivate a pleasing personality and you are bound to be striking and attractive.

MODES AND MANNERS

QUESTION: "Should a boy thank a girl after an evening's enjoyment, such as a show and limo?"—D. W."

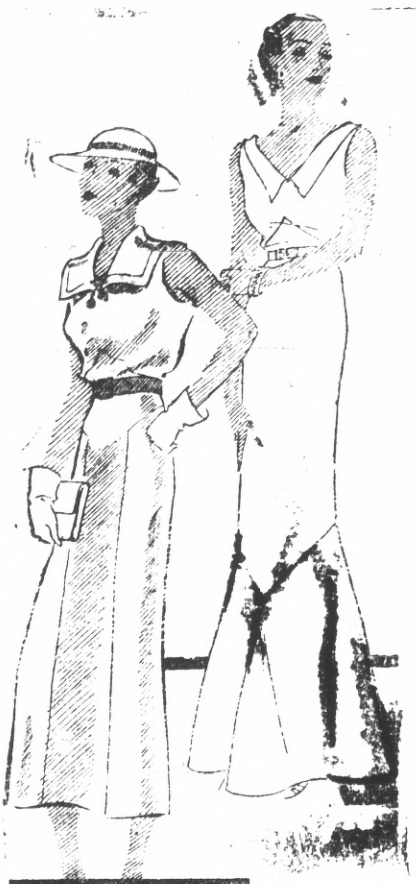

ANSWER: It isn't necessary for either one to thank the other as a matter of form. If the evening was enjoyable spent, it is just taken for granted that the pleasure is mutual. It is up to the girl to appear to be having a good time, however. If either one feels moved to say, "I enjoyed the evening so much," it is up to the other one to reply, "So did I." Such remarks must be spontaneous or they fall flat.

QUESTION: "I should like to have an afternoon party for my daughter's friends. At what time should the party begin and what should I serve?"—C. W."

ANSWER: An afternoon party generally begins at two and ends at five. Serve tea in the dining room—or have the tea wagon rolled into the drawing room or the garden some time around four. Serve dainty sandwiches and little cakes. If a warm day, serve iced tea instead of hot tea.

SPEAKING OF STYLE

For an evening frock white linen is the choice with the sheath line of the skirt broken by a flared blouse. The neckline is finished with little ruffs. Diamond belt buckle and diamond earrings give a formal note to this informal fabric.

GUEST DINNERS YOU CAN AFFORD

By JUDITH WILSON

SUMMER is a time for informality—friends sometimes coming in flocks on week-ends. It gives you a splendid opportunity to build for yourself a reputation for hospitality, but we must confess that it also tends to upset your budget—a serious matter in many cases. However, you can use a bit of imagination and call forth all your skill as a cook and dispense poorness of your budget. The simple menus given above are quite inexpensive since they are made from the plainest foods but they are unusual in their treatment.

Enhancing Poor Meals

The plainest meal becomes greatly enhanced if you use your prettiest china and glassware and your gayest linen and flowers to adorn your table. Pretty dishes and glasses are not expensive just now and you will find that a little invested in them will help cut down your food budget.

Molded Potato Salad

What dishes on the above menus will delight your party? The potato salad in a new guise is sure to arouse comment and demands for second helpings. Dissolve one package of lemon flavored gelatin in two and one-half cups of hot tomato juice. Add one teaspoon salt and three tablespoons vinegar. Set aside and when this mixture begins to thicken, add three and one-half cups of well-seasoned potato salad made in your usual way. Turn into a loaf mold and chill until firm. Unmold, slice and serve on crisp watercress with mayonnaise that has been whipped and thinned with a little tomato juice.

Chicken in Aspic

Chicken in a well seasoned aspic makes the pretty main course in the second menu. Use a four pound chicken. Dress and cut into four pieces. Place in a stewpan and cover with cold water. Add one medium-sized carrot, a few sprigs of parsley, two stalks of celery, one teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon pepper, one bay leaf and two bouillon cubes. Cover the pan tightly, bring to the boiling point and cook slowly until the chicken is very tender. Cool and remove the meat from the bones, discarding the gristle, veins and skin. Cut the meat into thin strips and arrange in an oiled bread pan.

Now skim all the fat from the chicken broth and strain—there should be about five cups of liquid. Soak one and one-half tablespoons of gelatin in one-

New York—There is the prod and can be almost every detail under discussion which brings me to the point of cautioning those with a failing for rushing out and buying the newest thing the shops offer, to wait a bit before accepting as gospel everything you hear or even see. Buy the more conservative things first. You never can be really sure how the early styles will develop. Sometimes they do from over-popularity, and sometimes they just naturally pass away and fade from memory.

Wide Silhouette?

One group holds that women have only just become accustomed to the wide top silhouette and it will be continued in new forms; another that the trends have been overdone and chaperoned and there will be a reaction against it.

We have already had several warnings from Paris, the storm center of fashion at the moment, that the trend was away from simplicity. After all, simplicity is a relative term. We have not been wearing conspicuously simple clothes this summer, so if our point of view is to be adjusted to the point of seeing the summer fashions as simple, it may give you an idea what to expect later on.

Fuzzy Fabrics

We have already heard a good deal about the fuzzy, or hairy, fabrics that are to be worn. It is to be presumed that they will contribute a good deal to less definite lines, and we do get an impression that lines will be less clearly defined.

Hats are to be fuzzy too, some of those with high pointed crowns are made of shaggy materials, either wool or of a mixture of silk and wool, or of feathers which seem to be waving their way back to the front ranks of fashion.

Not many of us can afford a maid these days, but the above "afternoon" uniform offered in colored rayon is most economical. This model comes in black, green or gray rayon with collar and cuffs of white organdy.

Home-Making

By ALINE STERN

There is a new suction clothes washer on the market, attached to a long stick, which makes it possible to wash clothes without wetting the hands or bending over. The gentle action and lowering of this device sets up a strong pressure which dislodges soil or forcing the soapy water through the clothes. For water comes in three different sizes. The smallest one is ideal for washing silk underwear and silk stockings, as it does away with rubbing.

A watering pot made of solid copper with graceful, polished brass handle and large seamless copper spout is an idea for bridge or party favors. Even if one hasn't a garden or a single indoor plant, even it will make a decorative piece for the porch or sun parlor.

LET CHILD PLAY ON RAINY DAYS

By JANE HERBERT GOWARD

RAIN days prove trying to both parents and children. The problem can be solved by creating a family holiday at home. Mother does only what is absolutely necessary, leaving special jobs for another day. This day belongs to the children. She must be at their service helping to make it a gala event. The house is their today.

A wise mother will reserve certain toys and games especially for rainy weather. The old toys somehow fail to hold the children's interest. But a special set of bright blocks will keep baby amused for a long time. Bob can take out his carpenter set, reserved for rainy days, and set to work. The girls can rummage through mother's scrap bag for choice pieces of silk, lace and fur.

Lessons in Usefulness Children should be encouraged to sew for their dolls and for themselves, to take liberties with style and design. In this way they will learn to express themselves usefully.

Mother can take this opportunity to point out and name the different materials. Together they can make a game of feeling the different pieces for texture and guessing the names. The mother of three healthy youngsters recently told me that she is teaching her boy to sew. She wants her boy to be independent. She said: "We encourage our girls to aspire to man's work in the arts and sciences. To balance the scales a boy should have a working knowledge at least of woman's work."

With such experience a boy should be able to choose and buy his own clothes wisely at an early age. It is good training.

Busy Hands

Give the youngsters blunt scissors and old magazines. Let them cut out gaily colored pictures and make-up games to play with them. What if they do mess up the room, if they are happy? Besides if we invite their co-operation, they'll be glad to help clean it up later.

Rainy days mean confinement, separation from friends and active games. The need within the home, therefore, is for rainy day hobbies as a pleasant relief from everyday occupations. Many a talent has been discovered and fostered during rainy days. The occasion allows mother to get close enough to the children to be considered as one of them, giving her the privilege to observe their preferences and abilities at first hand.

A Two-Fisted Irish Fascist... Ireland Reorganizes Itself

THE Fascist movement has reached Ireland, with former Police Chief Eoin O'Duffy, of Dublin, the leader.

Most Irishmen are interesting, but Mr. O'Duffy is particularly interesting, for he represents a new type of liberal thought in a country whose hills and dales are filled with sentimental tradition.

Some years ago when the Irish Fascist leader visited New York City, disconcerting in an audience he was addressing three eggs at him and called him the Benedict Arnold of Ireland, and made other charges against him. However, being a true Irishman and having a sense of humor, Mr. O'Duffy laughed it off. He knew the Irish are very clannish and concluded that he happened to be sitting at the wrong table as far as his critics were concerned.

Still, beneath this smiling face and characteristically good-natured man, there is the fighter. This again is a typical Irish trait. Despite the ease of a finger while trying to keep the world safe for democracy during the World War, Mr. O'Duffy had confidence in the power of his fists as evidenced by the following incident.

When he was made chief of the Civic Guards, the Irish Free State constabulary, Mr. O'Duffy disarmed his force and charged all corners to fight it out man to man, with the police. This offer seemed to catch the popular fancy. Many a young-ster with a bit too much under his belt, who took the challenge seriously, is crying for his sorrow that "O'Duffy's Cops" were well-trained in the hardy art of fist self defense.

Last February he was mysteriously disconcerted in connection with the secret document cases involving Col. Michael Hogan and William O'Connell.

IRELAND, which for the past twelve months has borne the cross of economic nationalism, now turns to the task of transforming native industry. This is the job that James President Eamon de Valera has taken on.

About one year ago he failed to make the Free State's regular half-yearly land annuities payment of 1,500,000 pounds. President de Valera had no need to negotiate with the British Government before he decided to discontinue the land annuity payments. He had no sort of formula or none of the face-saving devices which most of the Irish expected him to use to back up his election speeches. He had no sooner taken office than he quickly went the land annuities and then the oath of allegiance to the King.

Of course, the British weren't going to permit such tactics to go unnoticed, so they imposed a 20 per cent import tax on Free State cuttle and other farm produce, with the purpose of recovering the withheld land annuities. This was all that President de Valera needed. At one move he was made dictator of the Free State. Since that time everything from the potato crop to the League of Nations has played straight into the wiry, lanky Irish President's hands.

There seems no doubt that he is one of the luckiest politicians in office and there are few people who are more enthusiastic lovers of luck than the Irish. The British import duties and the Free State retaliatory duties which quickly followed drove a wedge between the Free State and its one foreign market. This wedge has caused results which are rather bizarre economically than merely political. The depression in America put an end to emigration and American remittances. Well, if a nation is to live and survive under conditions such as these, drastic reorganization is necessary. It was just such a reorganization which President de Valera has proposed in his election speeches.

The core of the Sinn Fein program for nearly thirty years has been the restoration of the lost industries of Ireland. President de Valera has, step by step, kept the promises of his election speeches.

Ireland today is becoming agriculturally self-sufficient. The growing of more foodstuffs means the opening of more flour mills and beet sugar factories. Clothing and shoe factories come next, and after them, factories for the production of building materials. So Ireland goes marching on, definite in her intention to remain a free people in a Free State.

Did You Know?

The correct way to skim jelly is to remove the kettle or sauce pan in which it is cooking from the fire and leave it alone for a minute. The surface should be undisturbed for skimming. Draw the film to one side, using a metal spoon, and remove.

Jams and jellies should be stored in a cool, dry place that is free from dust and mildew.

WEDDING RING FOR HUSBANDS NOT IMPORTANT

By MARIAN MAYS MARTIN

HAVING just listened in to a rather heated discussion on wedding rings, their uses and abuses, and particularly whether or not men should be forced to wear a ring, the question is naturally uppermost in my mind. Admitting that it is not really a burning issue, it has perhaps enough interesting angles to think about.

TO BEGIN with, it is a custom and nothing more, for a woman to wear a wedding ring. There is nothing obligatory about it. Sentimental brides usually do one of two things: either vow never, never, never to take the ring off after it has been put on by the bridegroom, or else they take it off immediately in order to spare themselves the thorns and superstitious doubts that would arise if, by any accident, the ring came off, or was taken off the finger. It is not at all unusual for brides to safeguard their feeling in this way.

ONE can hardly fail to notice that your ultra-modern bride not only takes her ring off, but leaves it off. She has her own reasons for this—usually a business or professional one. Actresses and movie stars, for instance, are not given to wearing wedding rings. Many business women prefer to leave them off, especially the Lucy Stoners, who are known by their own name and not their husbands'.

IN FOREIGN countries, some of them at least, it is the rather poetic custom for the bride to groom to exchange rings. European men continue to wear wedding rings and do not seem to have any particular prejudice against them. American men, however, are wearing one, too, but to lay the blame for this prejudice on a desire on their part to masquerade as gay bacchantes. European men do not find their wedding ring any sort of handicap or hindrance, but a necessity. One can hardly imagine a narrow gold band on a man's finger is going seriously to interfere in any way with an economic in which he has no need to indulge. Women have never found the golden circlet any barrier to adventure. Let's lay the blame if blame it must be, on custom.

MEN, having the horror they invariably have of being conspicuous or spectacular, quite naturally balk at wearing a plain gold ring unless every other Benedict is wearing one, too. Personally, I don't blame them one bit. What in the world has the wearing, or not wearing, of a ring got to do with marriage? True, the ring plays its part in the marriage ceremony, but a marriage without a ring is a marriage still, which seems logical enough, considering the fact that the nicest and brightest wedding ring in the world does not make a woman a wife.

IT DOES, of course, seem as though there might be some way by which an interested woman could discover whether or not a man was unmarried, without coming right out and asking. But there isn't, so the best we can do is hide our time, when, if he is the right sort of man, he is going to set our minds at rest by mentioning his wife, should he happen to have one. Men who have the customary regard for their wives, invariably mention them as soon as it can be done with something like naturalness.

IT MAY not speak very well for feminine ethics, but it is nevertheless true that the acknowledgment of a wife somewhere in the background does not by any means deter most women in their search for adventure. Even when a man is out for no good purpose he is not apt to pass himself off as unmarried. After all, marriage is, in some situations, a protection, and most certainly an alibi and excuse for not doing what one does not want to do.

THERE is nothing cheaper than a cheat, and it is much cheaper and cheating to attempt to pass for something that one is not.

The Sailor Collar

If you should run across a frock on which there is a sailor collar, hold it up to it and consider its other qualities, for it has at least one good one. The shoulder widening processes that have been going on quite naturally inspire neckwear designers and dress and coat designers to take advantage of this open space. There is plenty of room for almost any sort of collar on the gowns of the moment, and the younger set especially seem to have decided to make the sailor collar feel thoroughly at home, and very welcome.

A timely suggestion for the well-dressed woman's wardrobe is this bab: pink satin ensemble. The swagger wrap features epaulets.

WESTERN AUTO SUPPLY SIGNS N. R. A. PLEDGE

Bringing about the employment of many more men through the reduction of each employee's working time, the Western Auto Supply company is doing its part in the President's plan for national recovery, according to C. R. Ballinger, local manager of the auto accessory firm.

The N. R. A. pledge was signed and presented on August 1, the opening day for government acceptance of pledges.

"Approximately 1000 employees are receiving the benefit of the reduced hours, with, of course, no reduction in pay," says Ballinger. "In order to maintain our usual high standard of service to our customers, this necessitated the employment of about 200 more men."

"While our salaries have always been higher than the average paid by others in the retail automobile accessory business, and while our salesmen have always worked a shorter number of hours than others in this business, we have gladly done our part and signed the agreement with President Roosevelt."

The Western Auto Supply company has always adhered to the high standard of quality and service established with the opening of its first store in the west seventeen years ago. We have always given our customers the highest quality possible, consistent with fair price and fair working conditions for our people.

"It has always been the intention of Western Auto to make every store, regardless of its size or location, a place where people enjoy to trade. We have trained every employee to know the full meaning of Western Auto's policy of service to the customer and believe that policy has been responsible for the outstanding success of the Western Auto Supply company and has gained for us the name 'auto supply headquarters' among western motorists."

MORE MEN TO GET JOBS ON BRIDGE WORK

The total of 600 men now working on the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge will be quadrupled within the next two months "if nothing should hold up the work," Chief Engineer C. H. Purcell said today in his weekly progress report to Earl Lee Kelley, state director of public works.

Purcell's report detailed the progress of the bridge work as follows:

In Eastbay iron works construction of the world's largest caisson at the Moore Dry Dock is progressing rapidly. The caisson cutting edge is expected to be launched with ceremonies at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. The caisson will supply the foundation for the pier beneath the concrete center anchorage.

Driving Started

At Pier E-5—Driving of timber piling for a construction dock for the sinking of a caisson has been started between Yerba Buena Island and Oakland. The pier will be beneath the eastern end of the first simple truss span east of the Eastbay crossing.

This is the first substantive work of Bridge Builders, Inc., contractors on the job of building the foundation for the Eastbay sector of the bridge.

At Rincon Hill Concrete mixing plant being installed to supply the necessary 63,000 cubic yards of concrete for the western cable anchorage.

LINDBERGH'S TO FLY ON TO ICELAND

ANGMAGSALIK, Greenland, Aug. 7 (UP)—Despite the lateness of the season, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh plan to continue their Arctic flight to Reykjavik, Iceland they said today.

They arrived here yesterday from Eskimonaes, at the end of a series of flights one of which took them across the almost unknown interior ice cap that rises to 9000 feet.

Across Great Island

Leaving Holstenborg, on the west coast, Friday afternoon, they flew across the ice covered interior of the great island and landed their seaplane at Ellace, on the east coast beside the Danish expedition ship, Godthaab.

Then they continued to Eskimonaes Saturday, this time landing beside the Danish expedition headquarters ship, Gustav Holm.

Resting over Saturday night, the Lindberghs took off southward on Sunday for this town.

800 Miles Over Sea

They said today they intended to continue on to Julianhaab, on the south coast of Greenland, and then to Reykjavik, involving a flight of about 800 miles over Arctic waters.

Earlier in the season, when the Lindberghs first started their flight from the United States to explore possible routes for a Northern Atlantic commercial aid route, doubt was expressed that they would carry out their original intention to fly at least as far as Iceland.

This doubt increased as their flight continued, and it was said definitely they would not go.

To the Citizens and Taxpayers of Richmond

Your Council is now holding special meetings for the purpose of drawing up the budget for the coming year.

The first of these special meetings was last Friday evening in the Council Chamber, City Hall, and I was surprised to see not one person in the Audience.

Since these meetings are to determine how your taxes are to be spent in running the city government, you should show enough interest to be there and offer helpful suggestions now rather than useless criticisms later.

The next special meeting of the Council for consideration of the Budget will be Tuesday, August 8th, at seven thirty in the Council Chamber.

If you are interested be there.

O. R. LUDEWIG
Councilman.
